

NORTH CAROLINA

New member orientation is organized by the North Carolina Legislative Services Office for both chambers of the legislature. The program is divided into three portions, of which the orientation is held at the Statehouse and a subsequent program is conducted at the Institute of Government on the campus of the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill (UNC).

The first program is two days and covers administrative information as well as sessions on research, bill drafting, fiscal research, and ethics.

The second portion of the program is a one and a half day agenda that is facilitated by the UNC School of Government faculty and additional academics from surrounding college campuses. The agenda consists of issue briefings and leadership training.

The last leg of the North Carolina new legislator orientation involves a one-and-a-half day follow-up on the information imparted in the previous two sessions as well as an overview of new developments policy and legislative strategies.
